Sunshine illuminates the octagonal dome of Powell Library, one of the campus’ original four buildings. Moore Hall, in the foreground, was named for UCLA’s first leader, Ernest Carroll Moore. Moore’s dream of establishing a teachers college in Southern California eventually led to the founding of the university. Fittingly, his namesake building houses the Graduate School of Education & Information Studies.

On the cover: Throughout this annual report, we’ve sought to capture fresh angles of the campus. Here, we’re looking east from Hedrick Hall, across the Intramural Field, to Janss Steps and the historic heart of the campus; in the distance, downtown high-rises echo the campus skyline, illustrating UCLA’s special bond with Los Angeles.
